Understanding a Double Chin

A double chin may develop due to excess submental fat, loose skin, genetics, aging, or changes in body weight. It can affect facial proportions and make the jawline appear less defined, even in people with an otherwise healthy body weight.

A double chin can result from genetics, aging, skin laxity, or localized fat beneath the chin. Understanding the underlying cause helps a specialist recommend a suitable approach to improve jawline definition and create more balanced facial contours.

Treatment Options

Personalized Solutions

Treatment options may include non-surgical fat reduction, liposuction, or other facial contouring procedures depending on the cause and severity of the concern.

The appropriate approach is determined after a detailed consultation and facial assessment.

A More Defined Facial Profile

Double chin treatment can reduce unwanted fullness beneath the chin and enhance the transition between the chin, neck, and jawline. A personalized approach aims to create balanced facial proportions and natural-looking definition.

Benefits of Double Chin Treatment

Defined Jawline

Double chin treatment helps reduce unwanted fullness beneath the chin, creating a cleaner transition between the chin, neck, and jawline. This can make the lower face appear more structured and defined while maintaining natural facial proportions.

Improved Facial Balance

Excess fullness beneath the chin can affect the overall appearance of the face. Treatment can help create better visual balance between the chin, jawline, and neck, supporting a more proportionate and harmonious facial appearance.

Refined Profile

By addressing excess fat or skin laxity according to the individual's needs, double chin treatment can improve the side profile and create smoother facial contours. The goal is a natural-looking enhancement rather than an overly sculpted appearance.

Who Can Benefit?

Chin Fullness

Suitable for adults with stubborn fullness beneath the chin that does not improve significantly with healthy lifestyle changes.

Skin Laxity

May benefit individuals with loose or less-defined skin around the chin and neck who want improved facial contours.

Healthy Adults

Ideal candidates should be in suitable overall health and have realistic expectations about the improvement possible through personalized facial contouring.

MED ESTHETIKS

Consultation

A detailed facial assessment is performed to understand the cause of the double chin and discuss your aesthetic goals.

Treatment

The most suitable approach is selected based on your facial anatomy, skin quality, and individual concerns.

Results

The procedure is performed with personalized aftercare guidance, followed by gradual improvement in jawline definition and overall facial contours.
